HOTEL THIEF CAPTURED

J. H. Moore, a Man With Many

Aliases, Caught in Philadelphia.

AT the Hotel Cochran in This City

He Robbed Congressman Johnson's Wife of Her Jewelry.

J. H. Moore, alias Willis, Coulton, and a half-dozen other aliases, the man who robbed Congressman Grove L. Johnson of California, at the Hotel Cochran two years ago, has at last been arrested in Philadelphia. Moore is one of the cleverest professional hotel thieves in the country, and the police of half a dozen large cities in the country have been for a long time endeavoring to apprehend the man.

Willis, or Moore, registered at the Hotel Cochran, in this city, where Congressman Johnson was stopping with his family. He posed as a wealthy gentleman, and was assigned to a room, under the name of "J. H. Willis." A night or two later, while the Congressman and his wife were downstairs at dinner, their apartments were entered and a trunk broken open, and Mrs. Johnson's jewelry, valued at about $500, and $500 in money were stolen.

A half hour later, when Mr. and Mrs. Johnson returned to their room, they discovered the loss, and at once reported it to the proprietor of the hotel. Then it was learned that the man Willis had but a few moments before paid his bill at the desk and departed.

Inspector Hollenberger was at once notified and sent detectives Horne and Weeden out upon the case, but by this time Willis was out of town, having immediately after the robbery taken a train at the Baltimore and Potomac depot. From a picture in the man's gallery Willis, or Moore, was identified as the thief, and since that time the police of various cities have been looking for him. A few days ago he was arrested at the Lafayette Hotel in Philadelphia, where he had registered as J. H. Moore.

The charge upon which the man is held in that city is the robbery about two years ago at Washington of Mrs. J. A. Jammer, a wealthy lady, living at Twenty-first and Walnut streets. There the thief had registered as "J. H. Coulton, Harrisburg, Pa.," and the robbery was committed in such the same manner as that at the Hotel Cochran, the man leaving immediately.

A singular thing regarding the man's aliases is the fact that though he often changes his name, he almost invariably preserves the initials "J. H.," and this has aided in identifying him.

Congressman Johnson is now at his home in California, and Willis, or Moore, was for some reason not indicted for his offense here, so that he is not likely to be brought back here at present.

LOUGHRAN HELD WITH CARR

Grand Jury to Decide if He Was an Accessory.

CASE IN THE POLICE COURT

The Testimony of Several Witnesses Showed That He Had Been With the Thieves of Rosa Robinson Immediately After the Crime and the Next Day.

A preliminary hearing of witnesses in the case of Joseph Loughran, charged with being an accessory in the rape of Rosa Robinson by James Carr, was held in the police court this morning. Judge Mills presiding.

Loughran is one of the gang of young toughs with whom Carr consorted. He is about nineteen years old, of medium build, and very much befuddled. As he appeared beside his counsel, Major J. McDowell Carrington, this morning, he presented a most unimpressive appearance.

There were a number of residents of the neighborhood of the assault in court, among them Carr's little brother Joe, a nice-looking, neatly-dressed boy, in knee trousers and white sailor collar. He was seated with one of the witnesses, a Mrs. Sweeney.

The first person to testify was Francis D. Parker, who lives near the Robinsons. On the night of the assault, he said, James Carr, Joe Loughran and two other boys came to his house and asked permission to stay there. He had heard nothing of the brutal assault which had been committed, and wished to know their reason for making such a request.

Carr carelessly replied that he had gotten into trouble, but that it "didn't amount to much." Mr. Parker was a little suspicious, however, and refused to harbor the crowd, who thereupon left his house. He did not hear of the assault until the next day.

The next witness to take the stand was Mrs. Bridget Sweeney, who stated that on the morning following Carr's crime Joe Loughran came to her house and offered to sell her two tickets for a fight made out in Carr's name.

Loughran stated that Carr had sent him to dispose of the tickets, as he wanted to go to the football game, and didn't have the money.

Mrs. Sweeney, believing the boy's story, bought the tickets.

Detective Barker here produced the tickets and showed them to the court.

Major Carrington claimed that the tickets were not evidence, and said that there was nothing to show that Loughran had done anything wrong.

But Mr. Mills decided, however, that they were a most important link in the evidence of the case.

Loughran was held for the action of the grand jury, his bond being fixed at $500. The bond was furnished by Mrs. Margaret Sweeney.

RIOT IN A STATE PRISON

He opened the door, called the name of Prisoner Willis to Turner Dyring, and allowed Ernest to enter. Dyring conducted Ernest to a seat in the center of the big hall.

Herbert was called from his place in the workshop and soon entered and took a seat beside his brother. They talked together for some time, scarcely above a whisper.

There was nothing in the demeanor of either that suggested that they were about to strike a blow for the liberty of Herbert.

Herbert was apparently glad to see his brother. Officer Williams took a seat not many yards away from the brothers.

It was his business to see that no articles were passed from Ernest to his brother. However, at some time during the conversation between the brothers, Ernest passed one of the big revolvers to Herbert.

Just at 11 o'clock Turner Dyring stepped over and said: "Time's up."

Both the brothers started. By a quick motion, so carefully made that it was not at all detected, Ernest passed the loaded shorts and then placed his hand on the butt of a revolver, which he kept in his pocket.

Then the brothers jumped to their feet with a cry, "Now is the time."

Their action was on a par with the much-exploited deeds of Outlaw Perry, who made the thrilling escape from Auburn penitentiary, N. Y.

The surprise of the officers was complete. The revolvers were emptied as rapidly as the Willis brothers could draw the triggers, and the octagon room filled with smoke.

Bates is considering the proposition. Another of Bates' six wives is here to spread out a warrant against him.

SPAIN'S THRONE SHAKEN

atrocities in high places no longer exist. It is injustice and the misadministration of law by rulers that breeds anarchy and excites the masses. The test of absolute barbarism of any country is the administration of the criminal law.

"Any country which will compel persons by torture to incriminate themselves is barbarous, and not entitled to recognition in the great family of nations. That was what the Spanish did under Canovas, and that was why Canovas was chosen as the greatest example by the assassin of the Anarchists."

GUARDED IN UTTERANCE.

State Department Officials Expect News From Taylor and Lee.

At the State Department it was said today that no further information concerning the assassination of Senator Canovas had been received, although an acknowledgment of the message of sympathy called yesterday by instruction of the President is expected at any time.

The officials profess to know nothing further than newspaper reports concerning the political situation in Spain, but readily admit that these reports must be believed until official reports discredit them. It will not be surprising if Minister Taylor, within a very brief time, sends a long dispatch, describing as accurately as possible the situation in Spain and its relation to this country and Cuba. It is thought that Minister Taylor will not wait for Mr. Woodford, his successor, to do this, for Mr. Taylor, being on the ground at the present time, is thoroughly familiar with the situation.

Additional instructions to Gen. Woodford by the President will largely depend upon the information expected from Minister Taylor. It was said at the State Department that no dispatch had been received from the general Lee, describing the reception of the news of the death of Senator Canovas, and that such a message is expected was not denied. It is possible that Gen. Lee may be heard from today or tomorrow, but it is not at all probable that the State Department will make public the information he will send.

Secretary Sherman is very much disturbed over the Spanish situation, but declined today to discuss it.

SPAIN'S POLITICAL COURSE.

Sagasta Does Not Think Liberals Should Profit by Assassination.

Madrid, August 10.—In the course of an interview yesterday Señor Sagasta, the Liberal leader, said:

"The country's politics must not depend upon an assassination. The Conservatives ought to remain in power under the guidance of men like Marshal Campos, Señor Pidal, and Señor Edukayan. Nevertheless, if the Queen Regent appeals to the Liberals they are ready to respond."

There is a great deal of speculation as to the effect of the loss of Canovas upon the Conservative party. Gen. Canovas has acquired great popularity and prestige throughout the country in organizing the country's resources for the Cuban and Philippine campaigns, and he may be able to keep the party together. But many good judges take a pessimistic view of the situation, and lament the absence of civil statesmen of the caliber of Canovas.

ITALY FEELS THE SHAME.

Humbert Sends Condolences and the Pope Requests Details.

Rome, Italy, Aug. 10.—The fact that Canovas was an Italian has made the crime felt very strongly here. Many flags are half-masted. The premier, the Marquis di Rudini, and the cabinet ministers paid personal visits today to the Spanish embassy. King Humbert has telegraphed his condolences to the Queen Regent, and the Italian ambassador to the Queen Regent, Vittorio Emanuele, prince of Naples, who is now cruising on his yacht, will proceed to Madrid.

The Pope sent to the Spanish embassy for details of the crime. He also telegraphed on the subject to Madrid.

MR. REED MUCH SURPRISED.

Had No Opinion to Express Regarding Canovas' Death.

Bar Harbor, Me., Aug. 10.—Last evening the Hon. Thomas B. Reed, who came here on the schooner yacht Sardinia came ashore and took a train for Portland. He had not heard of the assassination of Senator Canovas.

When informed of it he was much surprised, but declined to express an opinion.

CLEVELAND DEPLORES THE ACT.

Civilization Stands Aghast at Such Terrible Evil.

Buzzard's Bay, Mass., Aug. 10.—Ex-President Cleveland learned of the assassination of Senator Canovas yesterday. In reply to a query Mr. Cleveland said:

"I very much deplore the shocking death of the eminent statesman who has fallen a victim to anarchistic rage. The world's civilization may well contemplate the terrible event with gloomy apprehension."

PROFESSOR BY A GYPSY.

Rise and Fall of Canovas Predicted by a Fortune Teller.

Malaga, Spain, Aug. 10.—Aged inhabitants of Malaga, where Canovas was a school master, who have followed the murdered man's career from his school days to the presidency, say that years ago a gypsy woman told his fortune, and predicted that he would become great and meet with a violent death.

THE CHAPPELL MYSTERY

Assault Seems the Only Way to Explain Her Condition.

FOLLOWING FUTILE CLEWS

The Little Girl Who Was Seriously Injured Last Thursday Night Is Still in Such a Nervous State That She Can Make No Explanation. The Detectives Nodded.

Miss Chappell, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. C. H. Chappell, who was found near her home, 826 Seventh street northeast, about 10 o'clock last Thursday, unconscious and bleeding, with all the conditions and appearances of having been assaulted, is still in such a nervous and weak condition, and so badly frightened, that she is not able to give an account of the occurrence.

"Last night," said Mr. Chappell, "a gentleman called on me after 10 o'clock, and after a quiet talk with him in another part of the house, I went to see if my daughter was asleep. She started up in a delirium, and began to scream the house, for she said she knew there was a man in the house, and she was so afraid of him."

"I tried to reassure her, but she still talks incoherently, and is still in a very nervous condition. I do not want to talk for publication until I have some definite information from certain clues which are being followed up. My daughter is not yet able to tell her story of the affair—she is so nervous and frightened at the mention of it."

"No, I have no ill-will against any of the newspapers for what they have printed, and have no idea, and never had any, of bringing any suit against any of them. The papers have treated me well, but of course I would rather nothing should be said about so painful a subject."

Dr. G. C. Burton, of No. 810 H Street northeast, who attends the child, is reticent about the condition of the girl, but consented to make a short statement.

"The result of the child's condition is an accident," was asked him this morning.

"Yes, but it will be some time, and I have no hesitation in saying that I don't think it was an accident. The conditions and injuries present are not such as could result from a fall of anything like an accident. There must have been a human agency and intent somewhere."

The police and Detective Weeden are still following up the case, and the theory has been advanced that the girl will not tell her story, because she has been threatened with punishment if she does.

Detective Weeden said: "We have run down all clues, and found no evidence so far as an assault upon the girl. The district chemist has certain material for analysis, which may or may not develop anything."

The child, Mrs. Jones, who took Miss Chappell to the country, with her on a blackberrying tour, stated that the child, while going out, complained of being sick. She had a violent headache, with cramps in the stomach, and was drooping all day long. The child seemed to be tired.

"A playmate of the girl's, Olga Reed, met Miss Chappell, just as she was returning."

"The boy girl was asked to keep away from her by Miss Chappell, and nothing more was heard of her, until her name was heard in the back yard of her home. We are still investigating the case."

FRENCHER IS SENT TO JAIL.

Also Fined for Having Sold Lottery Tickets.

George Frencher, the venerable white man arrested last week for being an agent of the Honduras Lottery, was tried before Judge Mills this morning and sentenced to one month's imprisonment in the District Jail, and furthermore required to pay a fine of $100, in default of which he will be committed to the same jail.

Detective Watson, the principal witness, testified as to the circumstances of Frencher's arrest. In the manner described in The Times on the day of the occurrence.

Frencher pleaded guilty of selling the tickets, but made the statement that he had obtained the tickets in payment of a debt from Mr. Augustus Thorpe. This defense, and the story of his life as he gave them, were fully related in The Times on the day of his arrest.

No other witnesses were called, and the judge at once pronounced sentence—the highest penalty.

Swain, the giant, who has been a soft spot for other clubs, has excellent offer to the Orioles. He could plug up the hole left by the Boston last week, all the same.

A Pittsburgh paper says: "In justice to the amateur Cincinnatians who throw beer glasses at the umpire, it should be said that the glasses had been emptied of their contents before throwing."

Ordi is foolish to waste his time as a pitcher. Being a born water and fleet of foot, he would make an excellent outfielder to the Orioles. He could plug up the hole left by the Boston last week, all the same.

MEANT TO KILL HIS WIFE

John T. Carr Held for the Grand Jury in $2,000.

QUARREL PRECEDED THE ACT

The Injured Woman Tells the Story of the Assault—Her Mother Advised Her to See the Defendant, From Whom She Has Been Separated for Some Time.

John T. Carr, the young car driver who attempted to kill his wife last night, was tried in police court this morning, charged with assault with intent to kill. Carr is a month-old young fellow, twenty-two years of age, and living his head the whole time the testimony against him was being given.

The first witness to take the stand was Mrs. Carr. She wore a light cape over her shoulders, and when it was drawn back a wound in her left arm was disclosed.

Mrs. Carr testified that her husband, with whom she has not lived for some time, came to the house of her mother, where she was staying, last night, and demanded to see her. After some hesitation she consented to come downstairs. He accused her of forgetting him.

"Why should I remember you?" was her reply.

This seemed to anger him, and he demanded to see the baby. Mrs. Carr refused to go after the child, saying that it was asleep, and that she would not wake it.

Hardly had she spoken when Carr drew a revolver and, aiming at her heart, pulled the trigger. The bullet penetrated the fleshy part of her left forearm. She went to Providence to have her wound dressed and then returned home.

The next witness was Mrs. Carr's mother, Mrs. Watson.

"John came to my house last night," she said, "and demanded to see Carrie. She did not wish to see him at first, but I told her it was his duty to see her."

"They at once entered into an animated conversation, scraps of which I could hear upstairs. I heard him say, 'You do not care for me any more.' Why should I remember you? I heard Carrie say, 'I do not care for you any more.' I heard the discharge of a revolver, and was so terrified that I did not know whether to jump out of the window or go downstairs."

"When I had gathered sufficient courage to descend I found Carrie lying with a wound in her arm and on a chair near at hand a pistol."

Serge J. Jordan, of the Ninth precinct, testified to the arrest of the defendant, and produced the revolver, which had evidently been recently purchased. But one chamber had been discharged. When he took Carr into custody he had merely stated: "I shot my wife."

Judge Mills, at the conclusion of the officer's testimony, held the prisoner for the grand jury under $2,000 bonds.
